THE ECLECTIC SYRUP.

A complete and agreeable remedy for Leeches, Florulae or Whites.

THE Eclectic Syrup claims not so much to be a product of art or genius, as the simple offering of nature itself, to check disease and bring about the painful check the enemy of the body.

The disease to which it is adapted as a remedy has been acknowledged to be attended with difficulty, as it regards a certainty of cure. While it seems to prevail exclusively, invading every walk of life and existing as far as known in every climate, the remedy when it shall be found and safely and without entangling other disorders, deliver the system from its influence, has not been so clearly indicated.— We feel assured that many will object to know that a discovery has been made, which places at the command a pleasant simple and sur--reptive.

The syrup can be relied on as capable of affecting a cure in all the stages of this disease.

The causes of Leucorrhoea are various, and depending upon constitution, temperament, location atmosphere, and habits of life; a sedentary and luxurious life, especially in cities, is one of the most prolific.

It is usually divided into three stages; the first general not affecting the general health.
No. 2, when the disease is well developed, in its second stage, and checked by beginning of evil; the work is then more safely and certainly done. This will appear evident from a account of the last stage of this disease by a late author:

"The face becomes of a sickly greenish hue subject to frequent flashes of heat; under the eyes there is an unnatural color; the lips becomes purple; the feet and legs swell; there is a dry cough and great difficulty of breathing; all the marks of dyspepsia take place, the whole system becomes disordered and unhealthy; and unless relief is obtained, the patient, from general debility and weakness rapidly declines, which ends either in dropsy or consumption."

Prepared by M. McVey, Mobile, and for sale by E. B. GOULD.
